The initial chapter of this treatise describes the general biological features of the South Atlantic; distributions of salinity, temperature, nitrate, surface chlorophyll and primary production are given, together with meridional transport and numbers of species. Twenty-nine groups are described, including the following crustacean groups: Ostracoda, Copepoda, Mysidacea, Amphipoda, Euphausiacea and Larval Decapoda (Brachyura).

The general form of each group is described together with methods of sampling. Anatomical details of a group are well illustrated, as are the geographical distributions. Further, some indication is given of biodiversity. Glossaries are provided where needed. Then, a description is given of the orders and genera, and particular species are described. The ultimate reference book on the subject.
