 South Atlantic Zooplankton; 2 volumes. xvi, 1706 p., 705 pls, hardbound. Crisp new copy.
 The initial chapter of this treatise describes the general biological features of the South Atlantic; distributions of salinity, temperature, nitrate, surface chlorophyll and primary production are given, together with meridional transport and numbers of species. Twenty-nine groups are described, including the following crustacean groups: Ostracoda, Copepoda, Mysidacea, Amphipoda, Euphausiacea and Larval Decapoda (Brachyura).
 The general form of each group is described together with methods of sampling. Anatomical details of a group are well illustrated, as are the geographical distributions. Further, some indication is given of biodiversity. Glossaries are provided where needed. Then, a description is given of the orders and genera, and particular species are described. The ultimate reference book on the subject.

Lake Titicaca. A synthesis of limnological knowledge; xxiv, 573 p. 7 colour plates, numerous text figures. Full colour pictorial laminated boards. Cancelled library stamps on front free endpaper, half-title and title page, otherwise a very good clean copy.
This is the "all you want to know about lake Titicaca" in the Andes, one of the earth's oldest lakes. It contains information on the geology, history and origins, the sedimentology, temperature, minerals, etc., and of course the zoology and botany. Many species are endemic, and for instance the molluscs show an interesting evolution. Some 30 species are known, and all are described and figured in great detail by Dejoux.
